Each unique puzzle piece contributes to the complete picture. If one piece is missing, the picture is marred.

We are each living an unbroken succession of experiences. If one experience is lacking, our lives are incomplete.

Even the smallest daily events have a priceless value. Every thought, every action and every emotion occurs only once. And in each encounter with others, whether it is in large groups or in the company of two, they leave a small part of themselves with us.

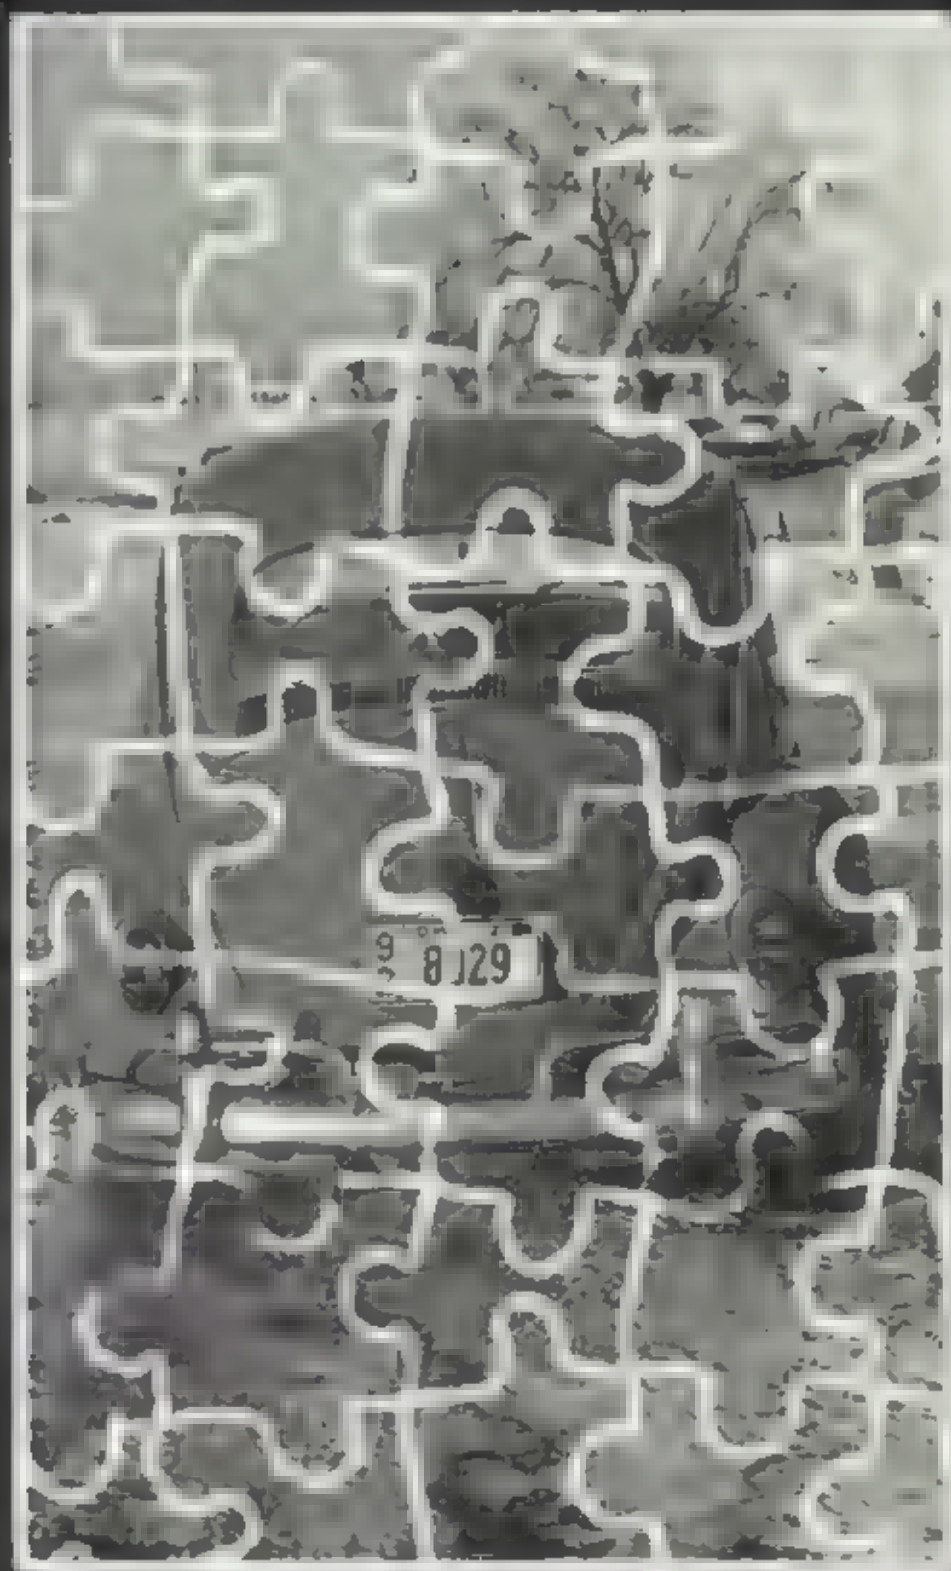

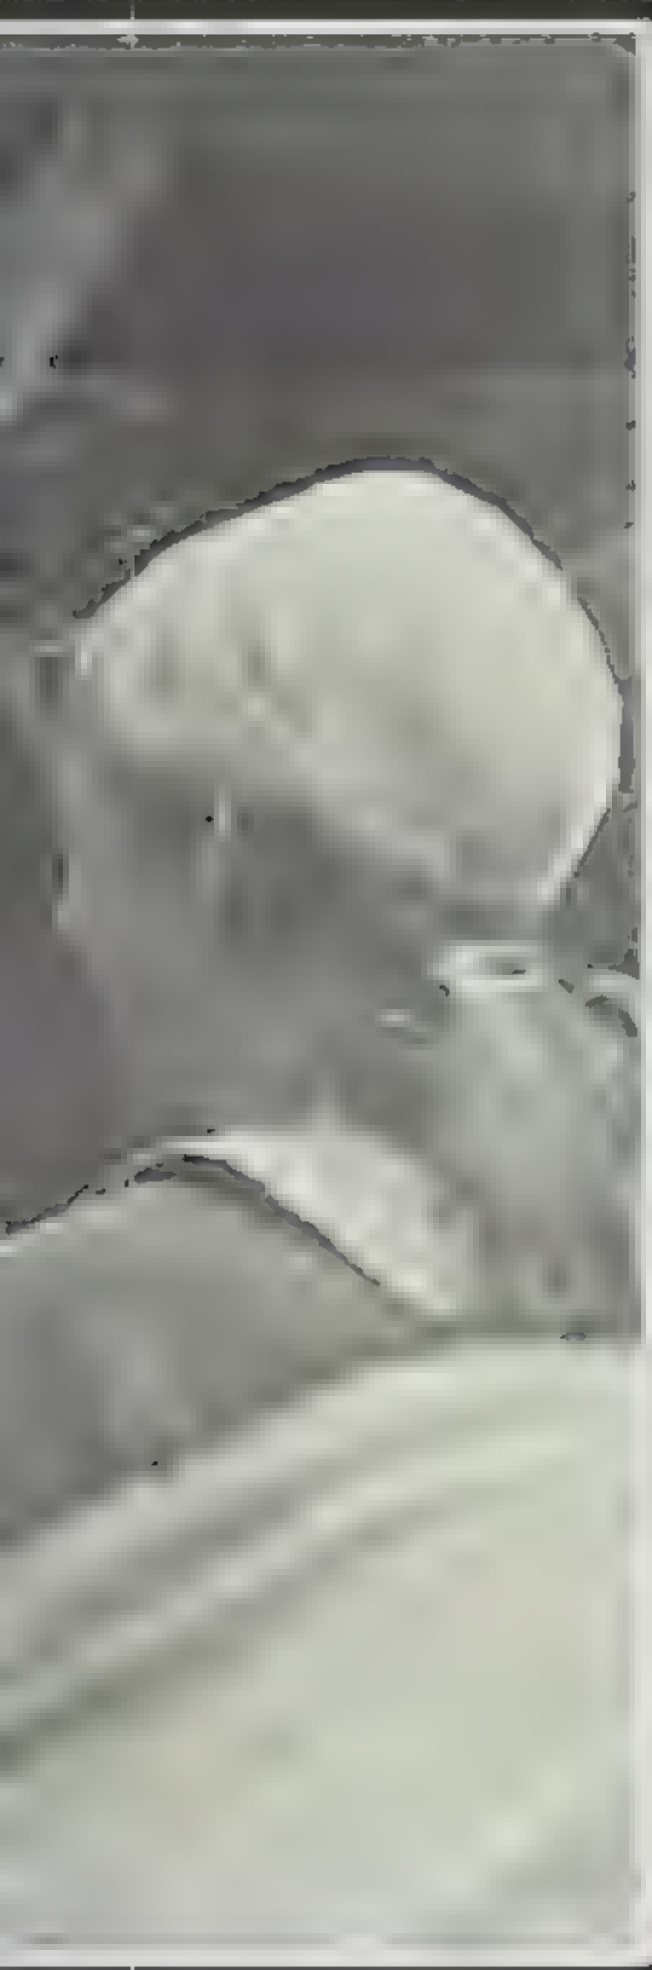

We laugh. We cry. We love. We meditate.
We get angry. We feel lonely. Yet each has its part and we savour every moment of the life God has given us. For a life time is made up of brief moments.

STUDENT LIFE

Student life involved more than just being a student. A vital part of life was relating to and accepting other persons. They became acquainted through parties, school-day-out, Activity Period, and lunch time.

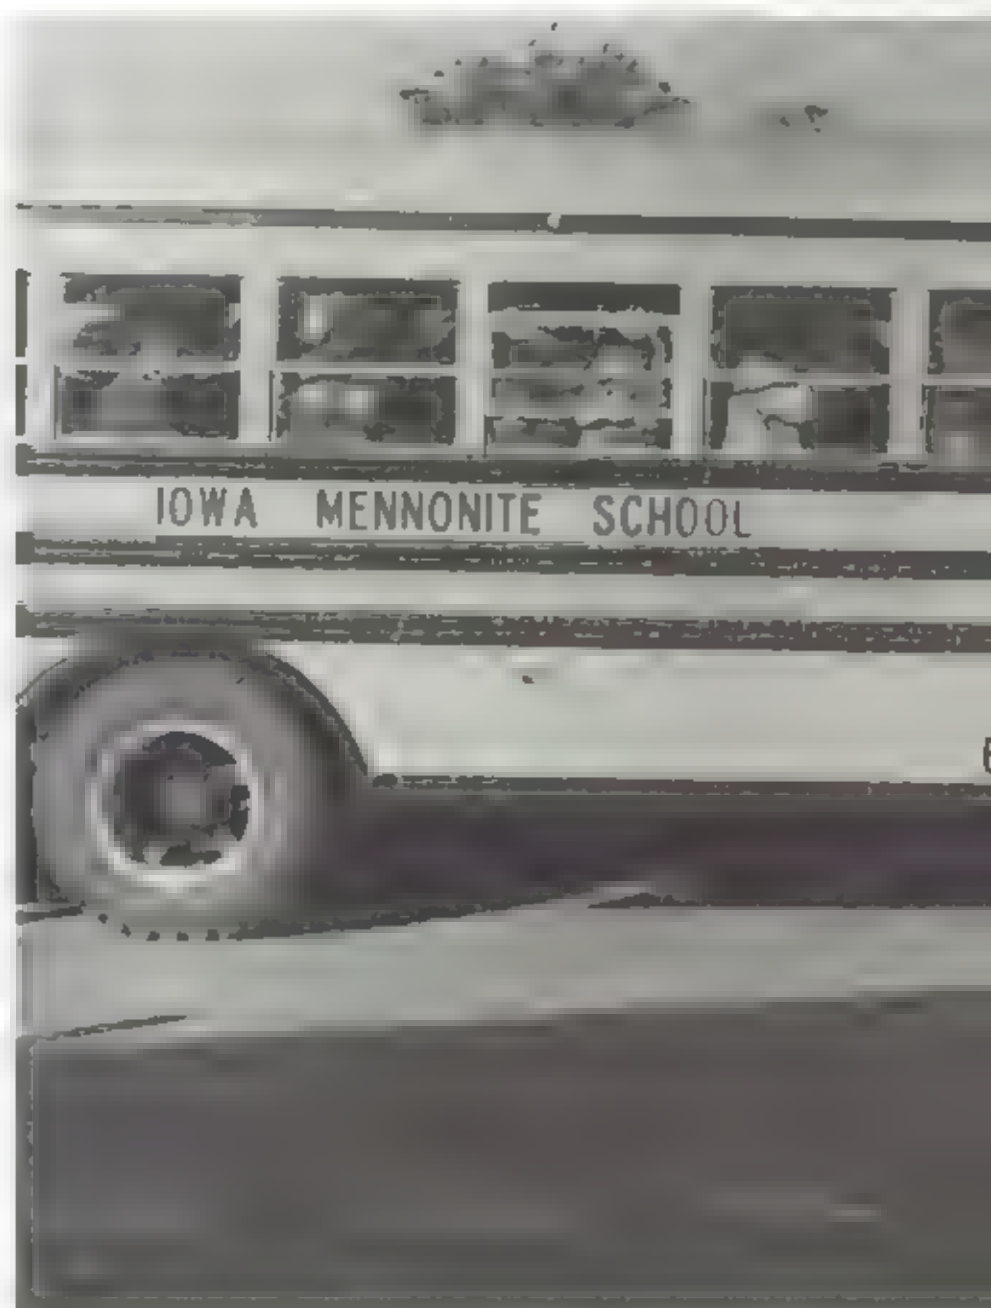

Students shared with each other as brothers and sisters in Christ. They helped and supported each other through the ups and downs of life.

The end of the day is the time for a last minute conversation for Cindy Shetler and Barb Yoder

Hiking rediscovered as a mode of travel

Students arrived around 8:15 and the hallways were soon filled with activity. Weldon Yoder and Jerry Miller or Merlin Miller drove the buses up to the door

Snowy country roads accounted for many tardy carloads and made students thankful for farm tractors

Three industrious seniors, Mary Miller, Crissie Shank, and Jerry Miller, got up at 4:00 one fall morning and walked nine miles to school. Kicking cans or rocks and watching the beautiful sunrise helped them forget their tired feet. Another ambitious student, Ken Hegwood, often biked those long miles from Kalona. Ken Snyder, the guidance counselor, also biked and hiked to school several times.

Rounding up the kids to go home after school was not an easy task. Some lingered, visiting or throwing snowballs. However, when the buses began leaving, riders boarded quickly.

Time out for God

Lives were spiritually enriched when students and faculty members joined daily for worship. Speakers included ministers and laymen from local churches as well as people from all over the world. Many slides were shown by people who had traveled abroad. Barb Graber, IMS exchange student to Sweden in 1971-1972, shared her experiences. Crissie Shank, also showed pictures of her homelife in Belgium. Lonnie Yoder discussed faith in action one week.

A new seating arrangement in a semi-circle gave a feeling of togetherness. However, Loren Swartzendruber didn't like it because people sitting on the sides could see his knees shake.

Over-all, students appreciated chapels. But occasionally they chose to cut chapel to finish late assignments or just to get-away-from-it-all. A lot of planning was put into chapels and it was rewarding to everyone participating.

Shortened noon hour limits socializing

11:45 — a mad scramble was made for the lunch line. The line grew quickly, backing up the steps since there were so many more students. Sherry stood patiently at the head of the line punching the mutilated lunch tickets and keeping track of who borrowed a punch from whom. And then came Mrs. B's food. Umm! But then they heard Sherry say, "If you don't quit putting paper in the garbage, we won't get any more pizza. Mrs. B doesn't like to fish as well as her husband." Some girls showed up with apples, pears, oranges, or soup to cut down on calories and to get some extra work done. There were always lunch-eon meetings announced during fourth period. Many committee decisions were made over lunch.

Many had to hurry with their lunch, since the lunch hour was shortened this year, even though there was an increase in the number of students to feed. Then all too soon the bell penetrated their chatter and students slowly drifted off to classes.

Action begins at 3:10

Activity Period consisted of many different things. Students who enjoyed athletics could participate in football, soccer, field hockey, softball, basketball, or volleyball either as spectators or as players. Joy Penner led the field hockey games. There was class rivalry in basketball, although sometimes two teams within a class played each other. These games proved to be rather exciting, not because they were close competition, but because the players were playing simply for fun.

Committees met during Activity Periods to plan for a special banquet, program or some other activity. The library became a place where students could catch up on their studies or have a chat with their friends. Then there were people who liked to release pressure by just clowning around.

Friday nights break drudgery of school

Class parties, Friday night games, slumber parties, and dates highlighted weekends. They brought a short reprieve from the routine school work.

Friday night usually meant a basketball game—interscholastic or the usual intramural games. For the players they meant pre-game butterflies and then a good tough game. For the junior concession stand they produced money. For many spectators it meant a chance to have a date — that is, if Dad wasn't using the car.

Night life flourished — with bushwhacking and crashing slumber parties, and, of course, the night wasn't complete without trips to the city for pizza and Pepsi.

Jobs pad pockets

Various jobs kept IMS students busy when they weren't in school. Many helped with chores, field-work or housework at home

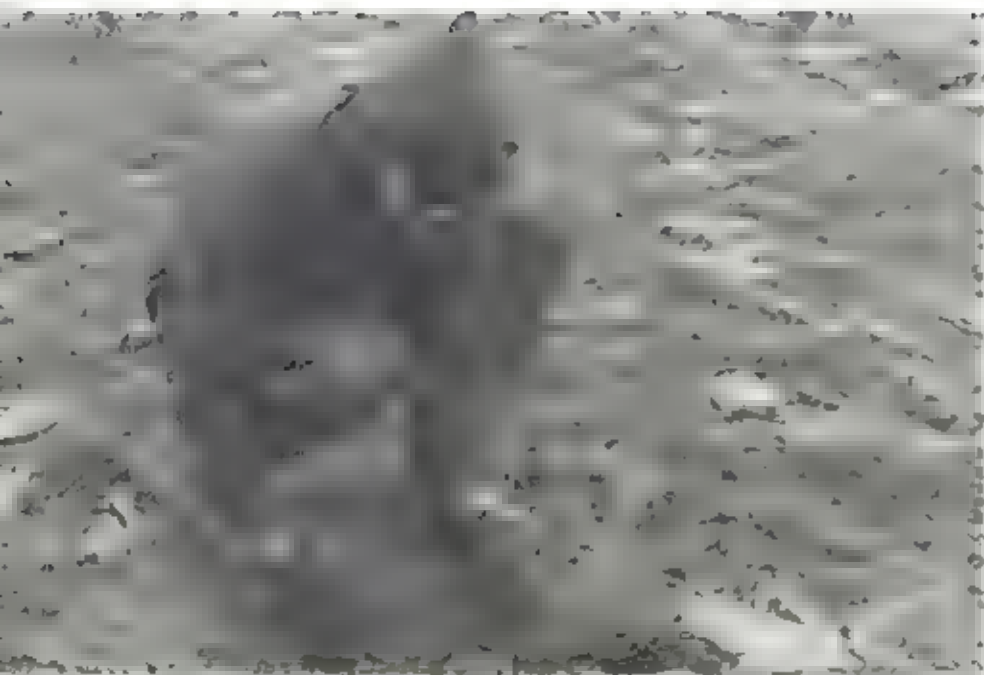

Rest-homes, bakeries, restaurants, stores, motels, gas stations and other businesses created a variety of opportunities for learning

Catching a shoplifter, dropping a hot raisin pie and other incidents made interesting conversation.

However, jobs were not always fun. Getting up at 5:30 on a Saturday morning in order to be at work by 6:00 was considered a job in itself. Then, too, grouchy customers and unhappy employers made an eight hour day seem like ten hours. But more frequently, mistakes were shrugged off with understanding and students were encouraged to keep trying.

The night the dike broke

The rain poured down in torrents May 13, 1972, as couples arrived for the annual Junior-Senior Banquet. The rain was soon forgotten, though, as they descended into the world of Holland. Many colored tulips surrounded the windmill, bordered the walks, and grew in the window boxes of the little farmhouse. Though John ter Harr, the guest speaker, felt slightly uncomfortable seeing the sea rolling over the top of the dike behind him, he enjoyed himself. The evening meal consisted of vegetable soup, steak, baked potatoes, beans, cole slaw, pudding and tea. After the presentation by Mr. ter Harr, the senior prophecies and their wills, the night in Holland was over. Tulips were picked for memories, and many parties went on late into the night.

Such were the results of the planning by chairwoman Mary Miller. All the juniors spent long evenings in preparation. Many worked in painting the mural. Room 121 became a tulip factory for the girls, while making a windmill kept the guys occupied. Of course, the seniors enjoyed snooping around and trying to see the decorations ahead of time. Many found out the theme, when a involuntary announcement was made one day in 121: "I just can't find any speaker from Holland!" The secret was out, but a lot of mystery still remained. Who would think of having cows at a banquet anyway?

Tingling toes typify day-out

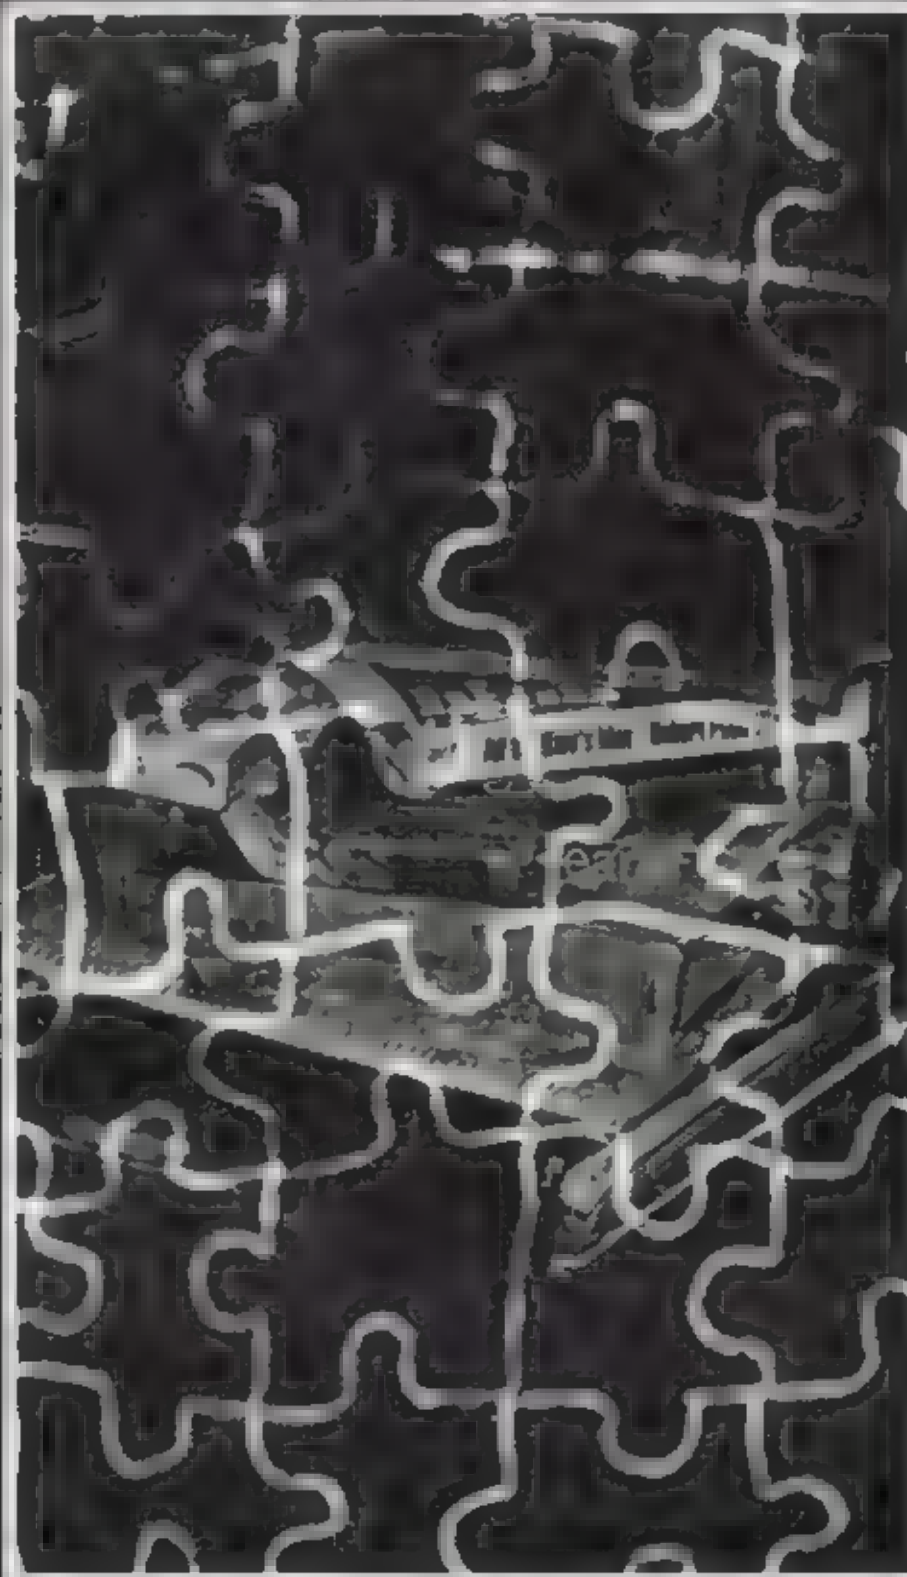

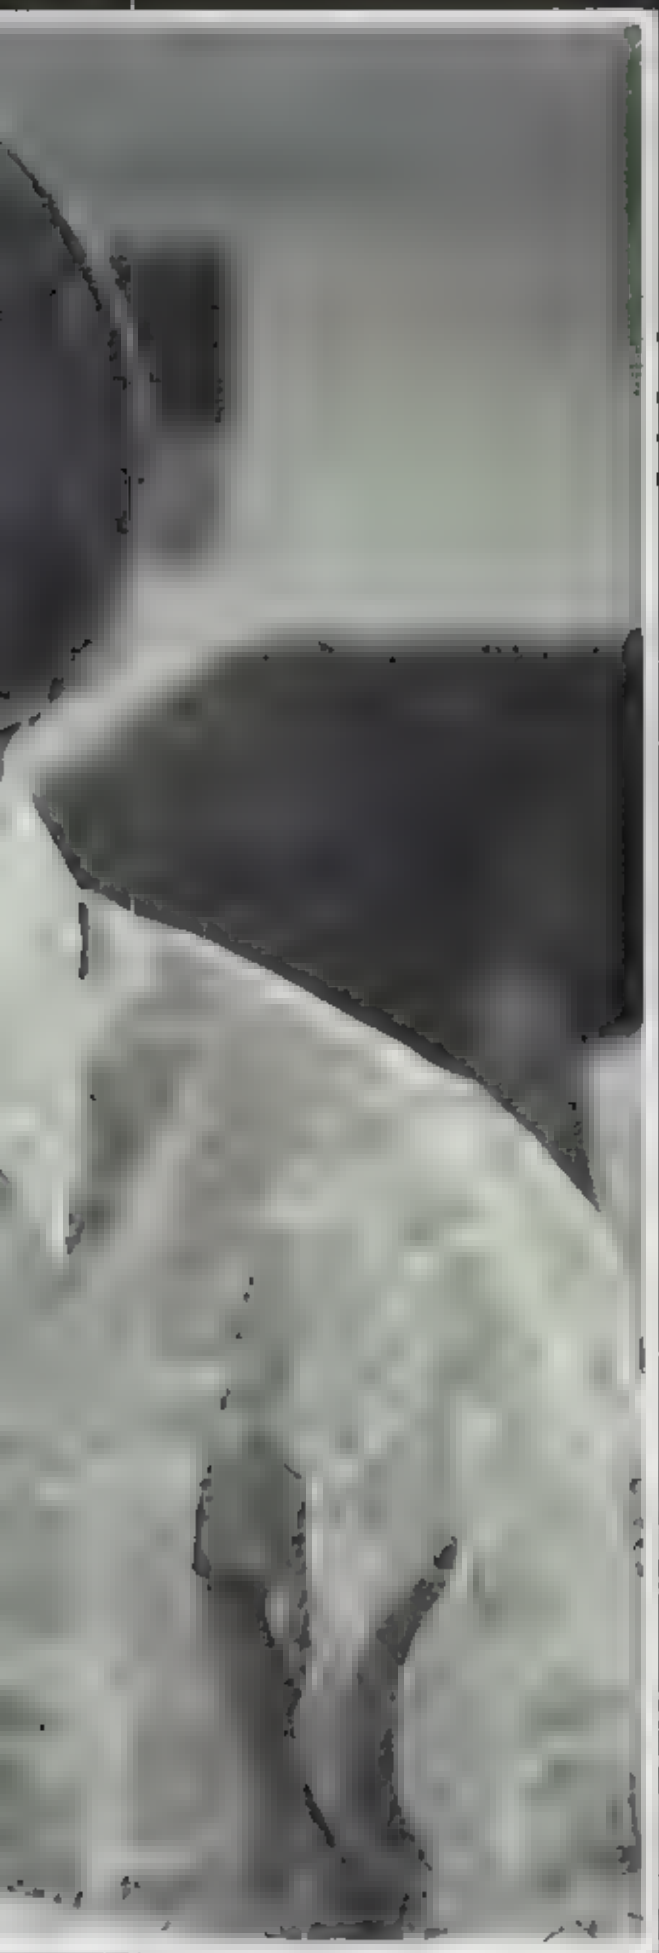

After a sharing time in chapel, September 29 found the student body packed carefully into buses and cars and heading for an unknown destination. The hour's drive was spent gabbing, happy to be free of routine classes. After arriving at Kent Park, they participated in a variety of activities. Some went on a scavenger hunt, while others played volleyball and soccer. A few were kept busy stilling their chattering teeth and thawing their hands over the cooks' grill. The delicious wienies warmed them from the inside out, but a few still huddled in the buses for lunch. Of course there were the usual casualties. Split pants, resulting from a strenuous game of flag football, did nothing to keep out the cold! Also, many shoes were caked with mud after chasing a stray ball over the embankment.

Before starting home, Myron Graber announced a cash prize to the class able to build the highest human pyramid. All attempts higher than five men failed. Therefore, the senior class treasury came home $.25 richer.

ACADEMICS

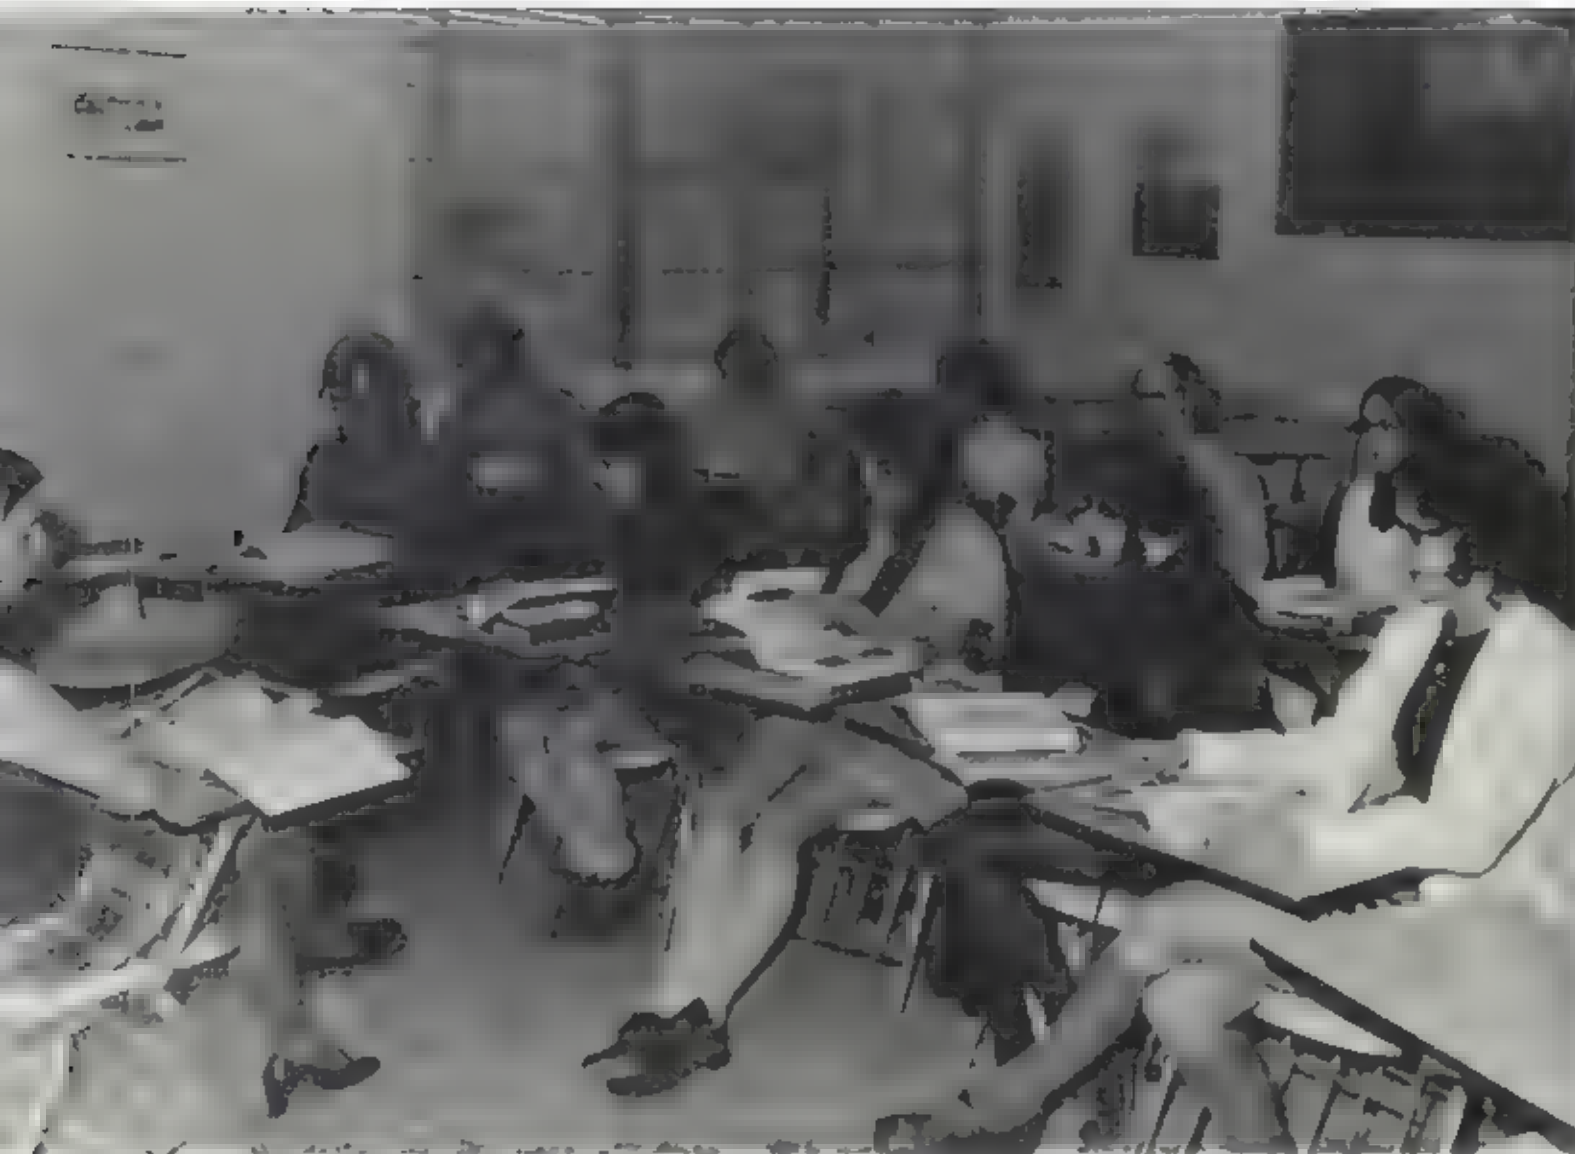

"School is more than studies" was the cliché often expressed. But one student asked, "Don't we come to school to study? Why be here if we're just going to goof around?"

As courses were changed, revised, and added, new learning experiences were presented. Some brought out good experiences and others bad. Something was learned even though it was only that students didn't really know how to study. Many students realized study habits needed work.

Electives expand language department

English classes, taught by Paul J. Miller and Joy Penner, consisted of a wider range of courses. Each broadened the students' abilities to communicate. The freshmen, sophomores, and juniors had the basic English courses which included some literature study, grammar, and composition. Seniors needed only one semester of English instead of the once required full year. More electives were offered, replacing the usual English basics. The quarter courses included mass media, individualized reading, drama, and contemporary literature. Journalism, writing lab, and world literature were semester courses.

German I, II, III gave students a glance into another culture as they learned to communicate in a foreign language. Correct pronunciation was learned, as they listened to Mrs. Tiessen and practiced talking in class.

Richard Beckler follows a German tape with the help of his book, Sprachlaborubungen Grundstufe.

Each day began with tongue, diaphragm, and vocal exercises for Concert Choir. They worked hard to perfect "This Little Babe," two Spanish carols, "Now Thank We All Our God" and many other songs

Hillcrest Singers met second period on Monday and Wednesday. Many talented freshman, sophomores and juniors joined their voices in song. Chamber Singers practiced during second periods on Friday for the Christmas program, their first performance

Those with musical instruments expressed their talent in flute, clarinet, and brass ensembles. They provided music for chapel and the Christmas program.

Election climaxes social studies classes

Myron Graber combined the teaching of historical events with that of present day issues in his social studies classes. Each class watched the presidential candidates in the November elections. Talking about political issues helped them realize their choice for president. They heard speeches from Jim Histan who represented Nixon, and from Paul Scott, representing McGovern. A mock election brought a Republican landslide. Mr. Graber said, "It's a fun way to show students how the governmental process works."

World history included studies of different civilizations through the centuries. A Greek supper culminated their studies of Grecian culture.

The American history class read Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee, by Dee Brown

American government was a required course for seniors. In learning about the political system, they visited the Democratic and Republican headquarters in Iowa City. Individual contracts were worked on during the semester. Sociology was an elective offered second semester.

Resignation limits business first term

Disappointment registered on many faces when they discovered that no business courses would be offered first semester. Then Mrs. Tiessen graciously took on two typing classes.

Second semester Miss Asai made possible Accounting I and office practice, as well as typing. Accounting taught students how to make business transactions while office practice gave secretarial experience.

Mr. Wyse adopted a program of individualized study for Algebra I. Half the class studied independently with the help of four student aides. The Math I class considered basic arithmetic problems and Geometry students proved mathematical statements. Five seniors elected Math IV to study trigonometry and the structure of mathematics. Mr. Newcomer taught Algebra II students.

The first snow fall has everyone in the winter mood. Deon Lechty mends his sled, getting it ready

Practical arts attained for future

Students acquired practical skills in home economics and industrial arts. The home ec. department was completely revised, offering a series of quarter electives, all instructed by Mrs. Wyse. Girls in Foods I learned how eating habits can influence a person. Foods II studied food preservation techniques. The girls visited the Cheese Factory while studying milk products. Clothing I learned the fundamentals of good grooming, and the advanced class studied textures of material. The home arts course taught furnishing skills, and the necessity of good management was stressed in home management. Clothing Through the Ages included the history of clothes as affected by social influences. A survival course open to junior and senior boys, taught the basics of cooking and sewing.

In Shop I, time was spent on mechanical drawing as well as woodworking. Shop II, III, and IV students worked on personal projects. This year several senior girls took shop classes, learning the basics of woodworking. Auto Mechanics trained the guys in the basic skills of cars and engines. They performed tune-up jobs and a few complete overhauls.

Health applies to the whole person

Physical education kept students physically fit. Involvement in vigorous exercise also helped relieve some of their mental tension.

Mr. May felt that students should enjoy P.E. rather than dread the number of laps they needed to run. Thus, after a few exercises, they played such games as soccer, basketball, volleyball, softball, and wiffleball. Later they participated in individual activities, such as tennis and track. Disabled with a broken leg, during most of the first semester, Dave May was only able to tell about, rather than to show students specific skills.

Health class was a new elective offered. The term "health" was applied in many different ways physically, mentally, spiritually, emotionally and socially. A research paper on subjects dealing with drugs, alcohol, marriage and dating was also required.

Students display creativity through art

The first semester art class emphasized the fundamentals through films and small projects. They sketched outdoor scenes, when the weather was nice. Carved wood blocks provided a means of printing Christmas cards when the holiday seasons came around Individual projects were focused on during second semester. Each student studied one main area of art and developed projects in that area.

Brotherhood experienced in elective

With the guidance of Jim Penner, Bible classes provided spiritual growth for students. Many notes were taken which proved very useful, when preparing for the long essay tests.

A new Bible elective was offered first semester. They met very informally and talked about problems that they faced in their lives. It helped kids learn and experience more of themselves and each other.

Seniors studied and discussed God and His nature, sin, and the doctrines of their church. Research papers and projects about sin were major assignments.

Juniors explored the early Christian church, the Reformation and Anabaptist history. They also had the experience of writing research papers.

The freshmen and sophomore classes were combined, and they studied the Old Testament together.

Students observe elements

Science was learning that a substance has many characteristics not noticeable at first glance.

Biology, earth science, and chemistry were taught by Lynn Newcomer. In biology, studies centered around living things. Investigations measured the mold growth in cottage cheese. In earth science, freshman learned a little about different things. They measured the angles of stars and also the amounts of heat contained by a substance. Chemistry included work on contracts at the student's own rate. Lab partners proved to be a blessing for technical experiments.

Physical sciences were taught by Allen Wyse. Much of the work was completed in lab books as they studied the elements making up matter and energy

Interterm interrupts regular routine

A set of unique learning experiences occurred January 2 to 12. Students ranged from Joetown and Iowa City to Chicago, Zurich, and Amsterdam. Frau Tiessen led sixteen students on a European tour while the Penners lived with seven students in Chicago's inner city. Meanwhile, seven girls attended Rosedale Bible School in Ohio.

There were varied opportunities here at home, too. Students worked off-campus as teacher aids, nurse aids, and clerical aids. Some were mechanics while others chose individual projects in electricity, music, and chemistry. Two girls lived and worked with an Amish family. A shop class mass produced walnut chests and coffee tables. Other interest areas were decoupage, needle-craft, pottery, photography, hunting, and trapping, reading for the blind, and death and social justice.

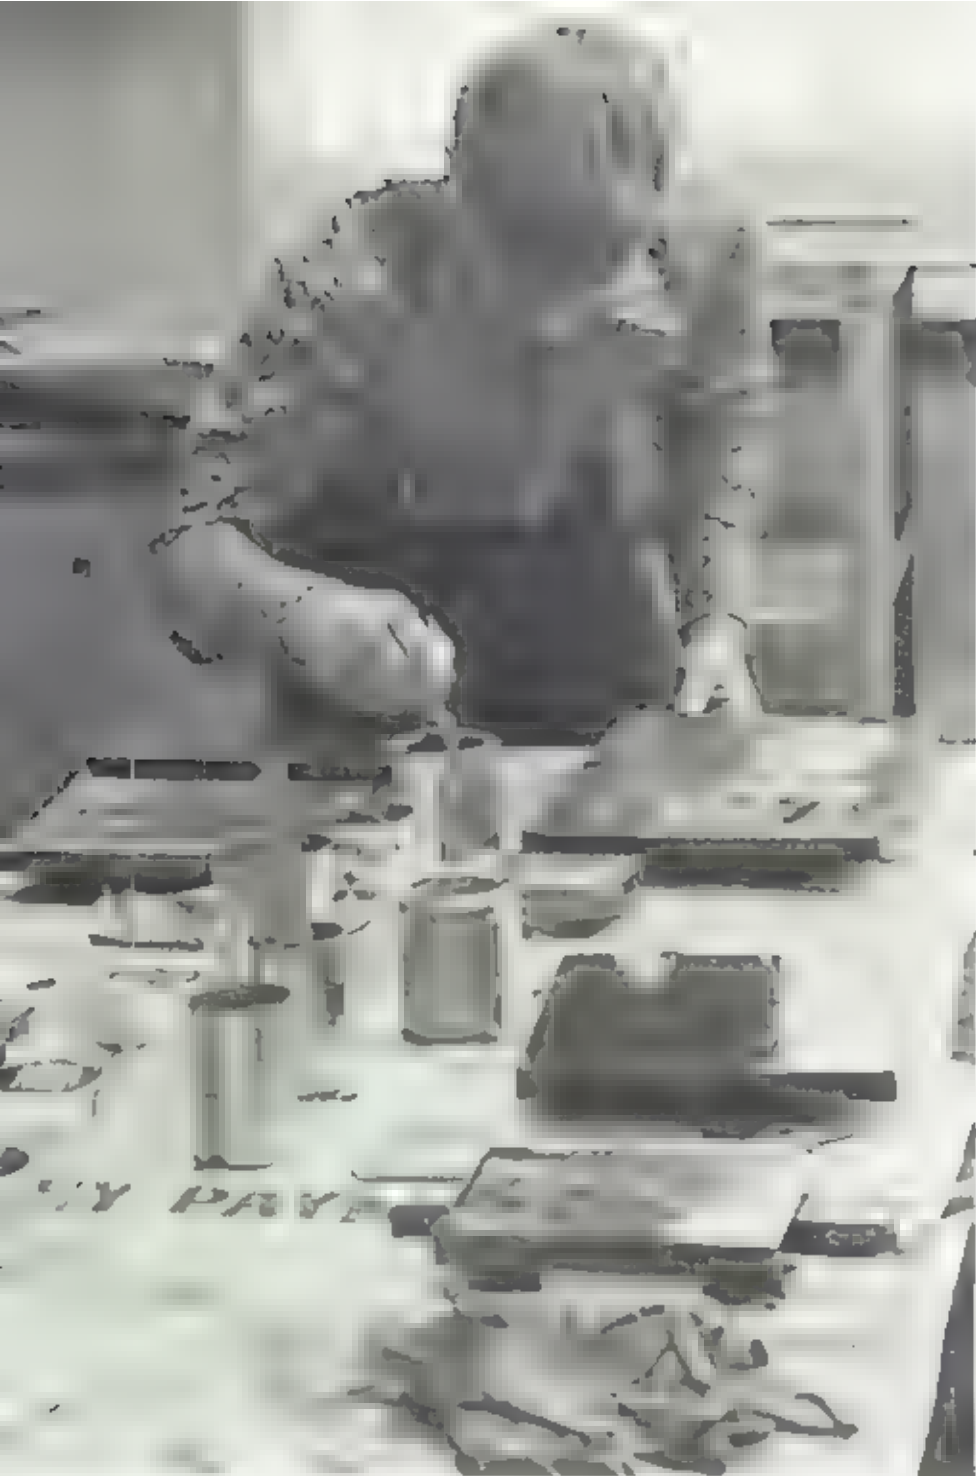

Most students agreed Interterm was a welcome break in the usual routine of school. The majority urged a similar experience for next year.

ATHLETICS

Sports, too, fit into student life. Coordination and team work were acquired in softball, soccer, volleyball, field hockey, basketball and other team sports.

Individual skills and sportsmanship were also displayed in tennis, badminton, ping-pong, gymnastics and track events.

Students learned how to lose as well as win. They worked hard to do their best.

Athletes enjoy intramural competition

Intramural sports, such as softball, basketball and volleyball, gave everyone a chance to participate. In fact, they provided the only chance for the girls to compete since girls varsity teams were not offered this year. Rivalry increased as class teams challenged each other.

Those persons that earned enough points through participation in intramurals, automatically became members of the Lettermen's or Letterwomen's club. Though it was an honor to belong, these clubs were not active organizations. Their only activity was an annual summer camp-out.

Soccer challenged ambitious guys during activity periods and after school. Playing Scattergood several times gave them the opportunity to use their skills. Interested girls also played field hockey with Scattergood one cold fall day. After the games the players of both teams joined together for a wiener roast.

Track and Field Day, 1972, provided an afternoon of exertion and relaxation. Two girls collapsed near the end of a race due to the heat. Others enjoyed the sun by soaking up its rays. Although sunburned and tired, the juniors came up victorious.

IMS ventures into interscholastics

Wildly joyful IMS fans poured onto the floor after surprising Columbus Junction by five points. Spirits ran high preceding the second sectional game with Highland. Nerves stretched tight that night as the final buzzer sounded with a score of 55-55. Three minutes later, Highland was victorious by three points. IMS, disappointed but proud, reaffirmed, "We love our team, we love our team ... You betcha!"

The sectional tourney highlighted a season of hard work and determination. For over three months varsity and junior varsity guys practiced each night.

Interscholastic basketball was a new venture for IMS. The students and community rallied behind their team, though some fears held on. However, many approved interscholastics as a good chance for students to display their skills and to make their principles known. Coach May summed up the season on KCII: "I couldn't be more prouder!"

Cheerleaders enliven school enthusiasm

"Go Red! Go Black! Go team! Fight back!" Thirty-four pep-club members along with a bleacher-full of IMS fans, stood and shouted wildly as the varsity sunk another basket. Tension reigned as the clock ticked 5-4-3-2-1 and Norway was still one point ahead! Disappointed fans who had counted on the sixth straight win poured onto the basketball floor at the final horn.

Five junior varsity and five varsity cheerleaders, guided by Mrs. Wyse, drilled every Monday and Thursday evenings, developing coordination and precise timing. They also aroused school spirit by making posters.

When asked whether they like cheering in interscholastics, Debbie Yoder and Faith A'Lee Yoder replied, "It's more fun because the whole school is behind you, rather than just one class. There is also more crowd response."

Many supporting fans signed the first poster of the cheerleaders.

ORGANIZATIONS

Organizations provided students places to put their different interests and talents to work. Leadership qualities, athletic ability, and creativity were expressed. Also students learned to work cooperatively although opinions sometimes differed. Organizations aided growth as much as studies.

Stuco evaluates their purpose

An identity crisis came to Student Council. "Are we accomplishing anything?" A questionnaire and several Stuco "rap" sessions decided that Stuco had a job. Every second Tuesday Stuco met, discussed, and organized activities which directly affected the students. The board and Stuco worked closer together by having representatives at each other's meetings.

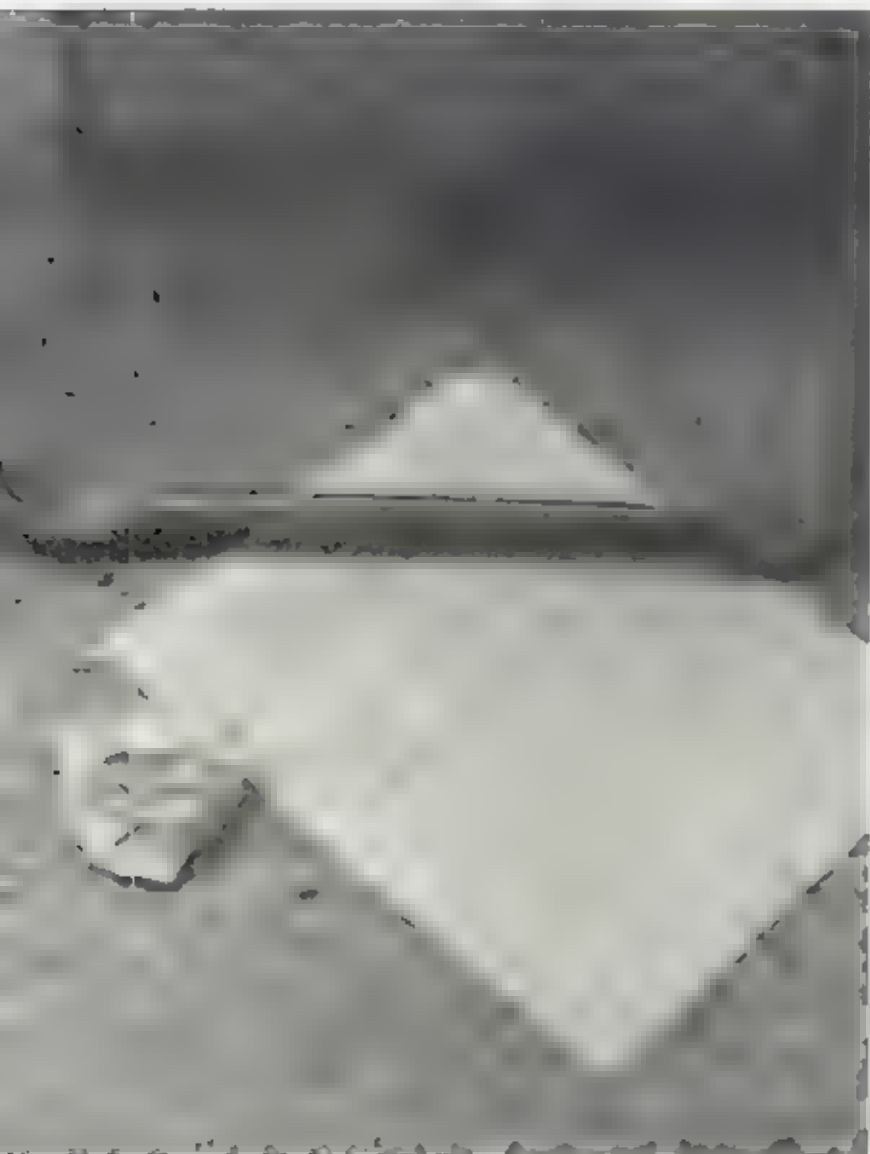

A recruitment party was organized in the middle of the summer to give prospective students a chance to know the returning students. The Get-Acquainted Party, September 9, began with the faculty vs. students softball game. It was a night of games and initiations.

On October 19 and 20, fall workdays brought in $4000 for the cost of education, a new furnace in Hillcrest, a stage extension, and the athletic department.

Y sponsors appreciation days

A disappointed student body discovered that plans for an International Christian Youth Exchange student to attend IMS during 1972-73 had collapsed. However, the Young People's Christian Association did help sponsor John Bender, our exchangee to Mexico. Local church programs and gospel teams were also sponsored by the Y. A big brother or sister was appointed to help each new student. The Sibling party began with a bike hike. Returning to the school, several "Abbot and Costello" movies, a great wrestling match, and a trike race provided the entertainment.

Over the years, the community has helped IMS a great deal, especially during the S.O.D. project of 1971-1972. Therefore, the Y sponsored "Appreciation Days", November 9 and 10. Students volunteered for free work in the community raking leaves, tearing down old buildings, or working at home.

Choir travels to Goshen

Musical talent was displayed through Concert Choir and Hillcrest Singers. Each day they practiced under the direction of Mr. Blosser. Sounds of "ja, ja, ja" and "ma, ma, ma" floated from the music room as they warmed up their vocal chords.

Concert Choir chartered a bus to Des Moines in November. They were one of three Iowa choruses asked to sing for the American Choral Directors Convention. They also traveled to Goshen, Indiana in April to participate in the annual Mennonite High School Music Festival. They stopped in churches along the way to give programs.

Folk group and junior girls sextet were organized by the students. They, along with both choruses, shared their Christian testimony by singing in chapel and in various local churches.

Paul J. Miller instructs Julie Erb how to perfect her layout

Although the Reverie staff was predominantly seniors and the newspaper was still mainly a junior job, both staffs were sprinkled with members from other classes. For the first time the publications were open to underclassmen as well.

Journalism workshop allowed the staffs to work on publications during class time, with the help of their adviser, Paul J. Miller. Traveling to Iowa State University for Iowa High School Press Association fall conference, they received new ideas and could have their questions answered by professionals.

Long hours were spent by Reflector writers as they sought to meet the nine deadlines. The photographers also worked hard developing pictures after school. Of course, taking the finished layouts to the printer, Enos Miller, was always an enjoyable trip.

Reverie sales declined this year as only about 525 were sold. Closing the sales race, an annual Reverie party and a movie, "The Trouble with Angels," were enjoyed. Editing a real book could be nerve racking, the staff discovered, as they sat chewing their nails and listening to the yearbook company representative, Fred Stoeker. They whispered questioningly behind his back, unwilling to expose their ignorance.

The publications room was cause for some frustration as it was too small for both staffs to work at once. At last the deadlines were all met, and relief washed over both staffs.

Camera Club consisted of ten interested members and their sponsor, Jim Penner. This was the only club open to anyone interested. Time was spent learning the basic techniques of taking, processing, and enlarging black and white pictures. Their goal was to produce good quality prints suitable for magazines. They also prepared portfolios of their best 8 by 10 photos. These were displayed to the public

PERSONALITIES

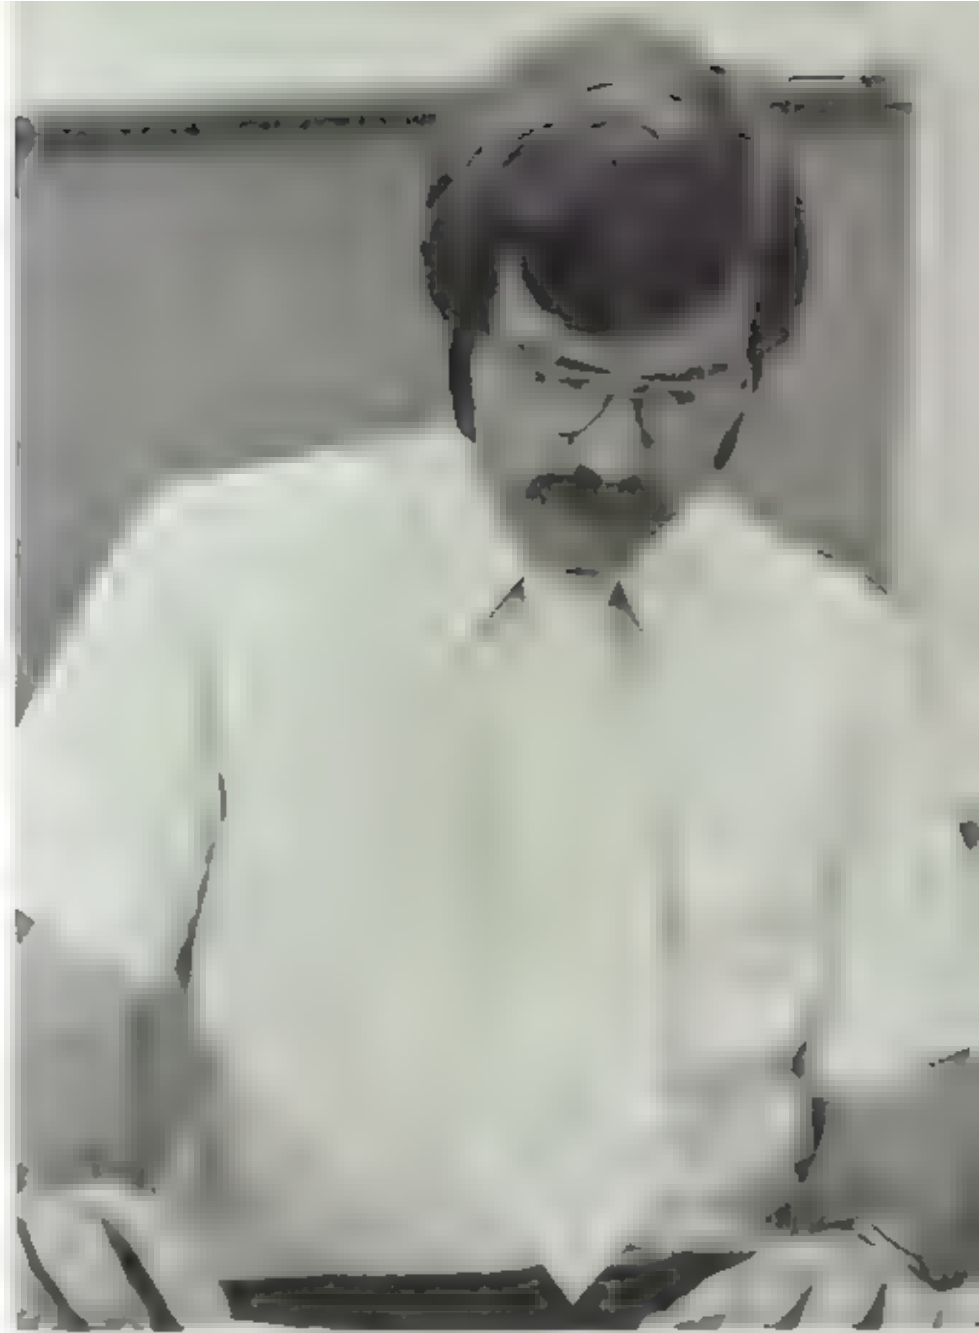

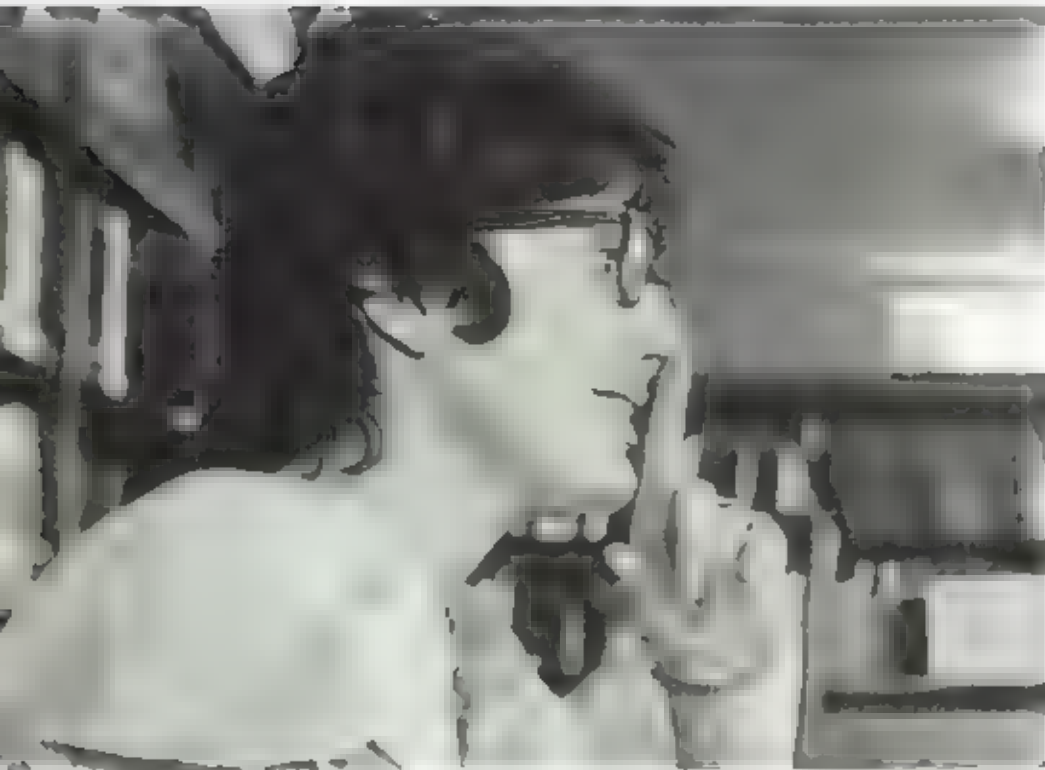

Ambitious people made great leaders. Laughing people added to fun and parties. Quiet people offered listening ears to their talkative friends. Studious people found a joy in books. Each of the 187 personalities contributed to IMS.

Varied opinions of the year were found. One girl said, "Kids care," while another said, "Nobody cares." As individuals, students had to learn to cope with themselves and as a school they learned to understand each other to make the year a success.

Five join faculty

The IMS faculty gathered from across the nation and beyond. A Canadian and a Japanese rounded out the faculty. Five new faces supplemented the returning faculty. Hiroko Asai joined them second semester to fill the vacancy in the business department.

Interterm challenged the faculty to design new learning experiences. Mrs. Tiessen planned many months for her European tour. Other teachers organized on and off-campus studies and projects in over a dozen different interest areas.

Staff works smoothly behind the scenes

Staff members amply filled their necessary roles. The cooks prepared delicious meals, specializing in pizza and country fried chicken. Patiently they helped seniors prepare their chili supper. They outdid themselves making a family style Christmas dinner

Mr. Gugel worked hard at keeping the building ship-shape. He picked up litter careless students dropped, fixed clogged drains, set chairs up, and mopped up after drippy ceilings

The secretaries, Sherry Miller and Rosie Miller, catered to the students needs. Between typing and answering telephones, they handed out band-aids, made change for quarters, sold lunch tickets, and lent out school supplies.

The Parent-Teachers Association bridged the communication gap between parents and school. Various speakers shared their thoughts.

Levi Miller stated, "I think PTA is very important. There has been good interest shown by the number of parents attending."

Ten School Board members kept the best interests of IMS in mind as they met each month. Responsibilities such as financial needs and teacher replacements faced them.

Many matters which they discussed, more personally involved the students. Student Council began working with the board when they appointed a representative to sit in on each board meeting.

The board approved interterm for two weeks following Christmas vacation. It was also decided that interscholastic basketball would be put on a two-year trial.

“We’re not just freshmen — we’re Freshmen!”

Thirty-one individuals formed the largest freshman class since 1967. Students united from the community as well as from Chicago. Initially, they were apprehensive, but gradually they adjusted to the routine of IMS. Charlotte Yutzy stated, “IMS is fun because it is small and the kids care.”

For the first time, German I was available to freshmen and was utilized by six. The usual math, science, and English courses were required. However, studies were finished quickly to leave time for Room 121 and just plain goofing off.

The fall work day prize was awarded to the freshman class as they ambitiously worked in the community. They earned an average of $25.08 per person.

Which class owned a Superstar Johnson, a Reverend Boshart, and a Governor Ray? The sophomores, of course. Their class number increased five times as twenty eight new personalities joined the seven returning students and sponsor, Allen Wyse.

The sophomores gained self confidence and self-respect as they participated successfully in school activities. Nevertheless, there were those who occasionally felt uninvolved because of their lack of transportation. The few envied guys with licenses hauled their stranded classmates to class parties.

Some were athletes, showing their talents in basketball. Others loyally supported their team in cheering with the two sophomore Junior Varsity cheerleaders. Many were musicians. They sang in Hillcrest Singers and played in different instrumental ensembles.

Juniors comprise largest class

Juniors! That title brought many opportunities and responsibilities. They accepted the challenge to create a unique Junior-Senior Banquet. Chairwomen Audrey Guengerich, Barb Yoder, and Julie Erb, with the help of 50 classmates and advisor Myron Graber, spent long hours planning this event.

Doug Yoder guided the junior concession stand as it slowly expanded the class treasury. Profits increased as a can of pop rose from 15 to 20 cents.

Other talents were expressed through sports, cheerleading, Camera Club, and Concert Choir. Responsibility for the Reflector fell mainly on the shoulders of junior editors and reporters. A few also participated in creating the yearbook.

Seniors question life customs

The year for forty-seven seniors was filled with memories, frustrations, and anticipation. Paul and Sherry Miller, sponsors, stated, "Even though it wasn't always easy, we enjoyed the class very much."

Chairwomen Marie Bender and Annette Guengerich organized the annual Chili Supper. The proceeds from this, a bake sale at the Kalona Historical Village, and a pancake supper went for the class trip.

Because of the many ideas represented, the class was not always unified. Graduation caps presented a problem as some felt they are good only for sentiment and that the money should be used more wisely. However, the deciding majority voted to wear caps.

Decisions concerning future years occupied the minds of seniors. Some knew exactly what they wanted to do, while others were still doubtful about the next years.

BILLBOARD

As senior students sold ads to local businesses they developed a closer relationship between the school and community. It was done as a service to the businesses, as well as a help in financing this yearbook.

Strength for Today from the Past

Hesston strives to be a Christian place. It is also Mennonite, bringing to bear the traditions and values of both ideas. Hesston College is sixty years old. Yet the structure stands tall and intact as we continue to build on the strongest of foundations.

For "No other foundation can anyone lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 3:11

You may choose the Study Service Trimester overseas, and for example, do field work in a rural Nicaraguan clinic.

What's your future?

Working in a business, teaching in a classroom, learning a trade, designing a house, nursing in a hospital, writing for the evening news, doing voluntary service far from home, chasing rainbows . . . any number of things.

Whatever your dream, a little more education wouldn't hurt. It may even be a requirement to make some of your dreams come true. That's the time to consider college.

If you happen to choose Goshen, you'll join an interesting assembly of teachers and students. You'll find a variety of courses, on campus as well as overseas. The skills and understandings you develop can be applied to a host of jobs and occupations. And you'll find that you've enlarged your career choices, not narrowed them.

And so the year has come and gone. But it is not really over. Each idea learned, each new discovery and each change still affects us and molds our personalities.

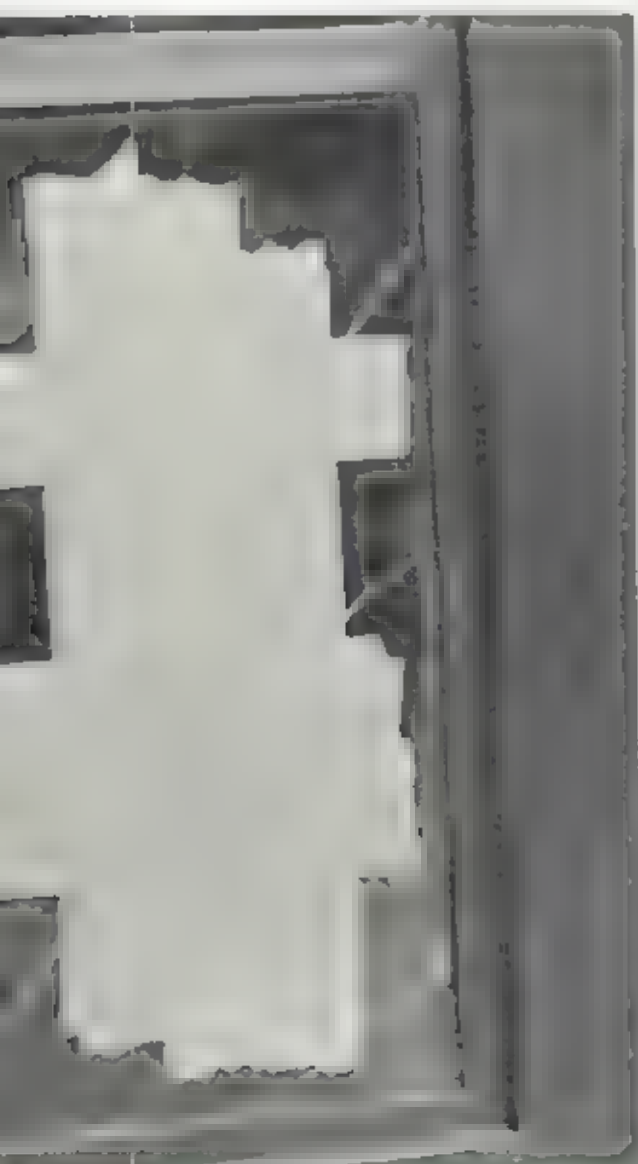

We look back and remember, but better yet, we are still learning to enjoy each moment of life. We seek an even deeper relationship with God and with those around us.

Our horizons broaden as we meet new people and new opportunities. We look forward to each coming year as special even as 1973. For a lifetime is made up of brief years.

A grateful thank you to:

P.J. for not yelling;

Sherry for the delicious pizzas;

Mr. Gugel for keeping his keys handy and emptying the Pub Room's wastebasket,

Dan Driscoll for professional photography;

Fred Stoeker and the American Yearbook
Company;

Parents for food and cars;

Reverie staff members and friends for putting up with our grouchiness.
